Cambridgeshire Constabulary
New Policing Model 2018

Cambridgeshire police, like many forces in the country, has faced unprecedented levels of demand and as a result the existing policing model was no longer sustainable. Following the Local Policing Review a new model has been created which will see more officers on the frontline and an increase in constables over the coming years.

New Structure

- 211 police officers dedicated to investigating your crimes
- 124 officers working in neighbourhood policing, supported by 125 PCSOs and 18 police staff
- 580 police officers working on response, dealing with your emergency calls
- Access to local policing officers for every resident
- New Community Action Teams to tackle local issues
- Additional investment in public protection
- Additional officers working in areas where there is the greatest risk and need
- A centralised Demand Hub to enable us to deal effectively with demand
- Front counters in every district council area
- Shift patterns aligned to demand

Benefits

- An additional 50 officers, all on the frontline.
- Increased understanding of communities with a centralised intelligence function working closely with local policing
- Improvements in the quality and consistency of investigations.
- Additional resilience, with shift patterns and team sizes based on those times and areas with most need.
- A Demand Hub that will deal with those calls that do not require police attendance.
- A sustainable policing approach that balances the budget from 2018/19 onwards.
